The whole subject is involved in such controversy and President Harding is so unwilling to discuss his plans and purposes that it is difficult to get at the truth about the removals that have been made and are to be made, but the best nformation available is that the Prestdent has become convinced that he must ose radical steps to introduce efficiency in the Government service.

Significant Statements Two outstanding statements throw ome light upon the intentions of the Administration, one is Mr. Harding's remark that the Executive is responsible for administration of the ment and has the power of removal. no matter what other people may think, and the other is Attorney General Daugherty's saying that "I believe that if it were not for civil service rules we could get along with less than two-thirds of the employes and probably get twice as much work out of them. I discovered both before I came here as Attorney General and since that the civil service employes spend too much time in working out plans to make themselves secure in their positions.

While the situation cannot be remedied at the present time, it is worthy of the closest study." Mr. Daugherty went further and de-clared that the spoils system produced a higher grade of efficiency than the ivil service reform system.
